

Case Reports in Clinical Lipidology is a specialized section of the journal dedicated to publishing peer-reviewed clinical case reports that focus on disorders of lipid metabolism and their clinical management. This section highlights real-world cases that improve understanding of dyslipidemia, inherited and acquired lipid disorders, and the impact of lipid abnormalities on cardiovascular and metabolic health.

The section aims to bridge clinical practice and evidence-based lipid management by presenting rare presentations, diagnostic challenges, therapeutic responses, and adverse effects related to lipid-lowering therapies.

Scope of the Section

This section welcomes case reports addressing, but not limited to, the following areas:

- Hyperlipidemia and dyslipidemia
- Familial hypercholesterolemia and inherited lipid disorders
- Hypertriglyceridemia and lipid metabolism abnormalities
- Atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease related to lipid disorders
- Lipid abnormalities in diabetes and metabolic syndrome
- Lipid-lowering pharmacotherapy (statins, ezetimibe, PCSK9 inhibitors, fibrates)
- Adverse effects and intolerance to lipid-lowering agents
- Novel or combination lipid-lowering strategies
- Secondary causes of dyslipidemia
- Rare and unusual lipid disorder presentations

Article Types Accepted

- Clinical case reports
- Therapeutic and management-focused lipidology cases
- Drug-related lipid disorder case reports
- Image-based or laboratory-focused lipid cases
- Short case series in clinical lipidology

Peer Review and Ethics

All submissions undergo a rigorous editorial evaluation and peer-review process to ensure clinical relevance, scientific quality, and ethical compliance. Informed patient consent and adherence to international publication ethics are mandatory.

Educational Value

This section serves as a valuable resource for:

- Lipidologists and cardiologists
- Endocrinologists and internists
- Preventive medicine specialists
- Clinical trainees and researchers
- Healthcare professionals involved in lipid management
